

At the end of this unique programme you won't just be accredited,
you will also be a better practitioner than when you started.

Certified Learning Practitioner group accreditation

So much more than a qualification

What is CLP?

Certified Learning Practitioner is a rigorous accreditation process, which develops and measures your learning and development skills through evidence and assessment. It gives you and those who hire you, confidence in your ability to apply your knowledge in today's competitive environment.

Getting better

Those that have gone through the accreditation have commented on the huge amount of beneficial and worthwhile learning and development they have gained; at a personal, operational and commercial level. Put simply; as a result of the programme they have become a better learning and development practitioner. You too could become an accredited CLP and a better all round practitioner with the Learning Practitioners Association.

Getting better together

The group accreditation enables a number of individuals to undertake the accreditation in a structured and mutually supportive programme. The programme includes:

- introduction workshop
- unlimited coaching and mentoring support via telephone and email
- telephone conference sessions for group discussion
- private forum to pose questions and seek advice
- assessment workshop
- registration as a CLP including letter of reference and certificate

Who is it for?

All practitioners in the workplace who want to excel in their learning and development practices, including:

- line managers who need to identify and deliver training to their staff that measurably contributes towards organisational targets as well as individual development
- internal Learning Practitioners who want to advance their career
- Learning Practitioners in training companies who offer training consultancy and courses to public and private sector organisations
- external, freelance Learning Practitioners who want to stand out from the crowd

Is accreditation for you?

If you want to:

- invest in your own development
  - set yourself apart from others
  - show your commitment to ethical practice
  - prove your ability to provide relevant, measurable outcomes for both individuals and organisations
  - demonstrate you can link organisational goals to learning outcomes from assessed learning needs
  - maximise your earnings by becoming more attractive to purchasers and managers
  - be alerted to more work opportunities
  - run your L&D activities on commercial lines
- then Certified Learning Practitioner accreditation is for you.
